EXPLOSIONS BRING BOSTON MARATHON TO TRAGIC HALT

Reuters

BOSTON Two bombs ripped through the crowd at the finish line of the Boston Marathon on Monday, killing three people, maiming others and injuring more than 100 in what a White House official said would be treated as an "act of terror."

It was the worst bombing on U.S. soil since security was tightened after the attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, and President Obama promised to hunt down whoever was responsible for the attack on a day when tens of thousands of spectators packed the streets to watch the world-famous race.

No one has been arrested and the White House official said it had yet to be determined whether the attack came from a foreign or domestic source.

Investigators found what could be five additional, undetonated explosive devices around the Boston area, the Wall Street Journal reported, citing two unnamed people briefed on the investigation. The evidence had yet to be fully analyzed, the Journal said.

The blasts, a few seconds apart, knocked some runners off their feet and shattered what had been a resplendent spring day.

Many runners were heading for the finish when a fireball and smoke rose from behind cheering spectators and a row of flags representing the nations of participants, video from the scene showed.

The cheers turned to screams and panic.

"I saw people who looked like they had their legs blown off. There was a lot of blood over their legs. Then people were being pushed in wheelchairs," said Joe Anderson, 33, a fisherman from Pembroke, Mass., who had just run the race holding a large U.S. flag.

Many of the victims were gravely injured, Massachusetts Governor Deval Patrick said.

Some suffered shrapnel wounds and am-putations and will require repeat operations in the coming days, said Peter Fagenholtz, a trauma surgeon at Massachusetts General Hospital.

The dead included an 8-year-old boy, the Boston Globe reported, citing two law enforcement sources briefed on the investigation.

'UNDER SIEGE'

EXPLOSIONS, SMOKE, THEN SCREAMS—CHICAGO RUNNERS RECOUNT DEADLY BOSTON MARATHON BOMBING

Chicago Tribune

Eric Giandelone had finished the Boston Marathon and was drinking a cup of coffee, watching the other runners cross the finish line, when he heard the blast.

"I looked up and I saw debris flying," said Giandelone, 34, of Chicago.

Runners and spectators were running away from the finish line when a second explosion went off about 10 seconds later, this one a little farther away, he said.

He saw many injured, including some with limbs missing.

"It's a pretty disturbing thing to see," Giandelone said.

Police said three people were killed and more than 100 were injured by two bombs that detonated near the finish of the Boston Marathon on Monday afternoon.

The historic race attracts thousands of runners from across the country, including 974 registered runners from Illinois, 361 of whom were from Chicago, according to the race's website.

On Monday afternoon, some of those Chicago-area runners shared firsthand accounts of the terror they witnessed during their runs, or the fear they suffered as they tried to contact loved ones.

Diane Montiel, 63, of Chicago, whose husband, Steven Alexander, works for WGN, said she was in the bleachers not far from the explosion. She had been to the marathon four times prior, and said there was not a space along the entire route where people weren't standing.

She had just watched her daughter cross the finish line and was waiting for friends to cross when she heard the explosion.

"We thought, 'Oh what's that?'" she recalled. Then, seconds later, there was a second blast, stronger than the first.

Police standing nearby yelled at her and others to duck down.

"Within a few seconds, the smoke started to clear. The people [across the street] who had been there were no longer there," she said. "People were screaming. I saw some runners go down also."

Police yelled at her and others to "Get out!" and leave the bleachers, to go to the library building nearby.

"I kept saying, 'Oh My God! Oh My God.' I had never experienced anything like that before. But you just go, you run and keep going. You become focused on getting out. I was shaking and then I started crying. We didn't know if that was the end or if that is just the beginning. Boston is a small city and we were all packed in. I was very afraid."

Once she got away from the scene, she ran to the library police directed her to, and then ran all the way to her hotel.

"We had no clue if more explosions were coming," she said. "We were very fearful, being so close. At that point all I really cared about was finding my daughter."

Frantic phone calls ensued, but it took 40 minutes before she learned her daughter and husband were safe.

Rebecca Trantowski Farrell, 37, of Glen Ellyn, had crossed the finish line seconds before the first explosion.

"It sounded like a cannon, and there was all this gray smoke, then another one a couple seconds later," said Farrell. "I finished at about four hours, so I thought maybe it was a cannon or something they set off."

"Then all the race personnel came out and were just yelling 'Get moving! Get out!'"

She and others contemplated whether to climb fences and take cover, or just run away as fast as possible.

"You weren't quite sure what to do," she said.

Farrell's thoughts turned to her husband, John, who had planned to meet her near the finish line, which she could no longer see. Her husband, meanwhile, was outside the fenced-in finish area, panicked.

"He had gotten a message that I had just crossed the finish line, then he heard the explosion."

Instead of their planned meeting point, they found each other at the station for runners' gear.

She said emergency personnel were on the scene quickly, running in the opposite direction from her and other racers.

"It felt like we were under siege," she said. "It kind of stunned everybody."

Dan Daly, 50, of Chicago, there with the Fleet Feet Boston Bound training group, had finished the race and was walking toward his hotel when he heard the explosions about 300 yards away.

"We froze. We thought something had fallen," he said, but then saw people running.

They "had the look of horror and terror. Children were crying and I knew it was an act of terror," he said. "I was overcome with emotion and fear for those that were nearby. I couldn't believe that someone or some group would do this to an event like the Boston Marathon."

'They will feel the full weight of justice'

President Obama called both Massachusetts Gov. Deval Patrick and Boston Mayor Thomas M. Menino following the blasts.

"We will get to the bottom of this," he said Monday evening. "We will find out who did this and we will find out why. They will feel the full weight of justice. Boston is a tough and resilient town. Residents will pull together, take care of each other and move forward," he added. "The American people are with them every step of the way." REUTERS

"My first instinct was to run and try to help. But there were so many police coming. I was concerned about my family. I decided to let the authorities and professionals [help]; the medical tent was close by. There were tons and tons of law enforcement. So I went back to my hotel to find my group from Chicago. There are 86 of us here from Chicago. We are all safe.

"Now it's somber and it put a damper on what is usually celebration. People are affected and praying for those that lost their lives and have been injured."

Local authorities ramp up security

Chicago Tribune

With Monday's explosions at one of the nation's most iconic sporting events, Illinois officials immediately began to look to Boston for clues on how to protect a public headed into warmer months of crowded ballparks, festivals and even a marathon.

Even as authorities have begun to relax a few of the nation's post-9/11 airport restrictions, the attack at the Boston Marathon comes as a stark reminder that this is an age when every public gathering or event—no matter how festive—can be considered a target for terror.

That reality has transformed workplaces, schools and commutes, and experts say the apparent terror attack in Boston will offer yet another case study to reshape the security landscape.

Authorities in Chicago said their security teams have kicked into higher alert as a result of Monday's calamity.

Chicago police and the city's Office of Emergency Management and Communication issued statements Monday saying that while there was no known threat to Chicago, officials were monitoring the bombing at the marathon and talking to their counterparts both locally and across the country.

After the afternoon explosions in Boston, Metra added security officers to its trains and asked passengers to be extra vigilant, looking out for "anything unusual," the commuter rail agency said. Chicago Transit Authority officials said they were increasing the frequency of such announcements on elevated trains.

United Center officials declined to comment on any changes in security measures for Monday evening's Blackhawks game, but a moment of silence was observed in the arena before the game. It was the only major sporting event Monday in Chicago.

The attack in Boston on Monday was especially devastating for members of Chicago's running community. Leaders of several organizations, including the Chicago Marathon, attended the marathon in Boston.

Chicago Marathon director Carey Pinkowski, who already had left for Logan Airport before the explosions, said he and his staff were badly shaken by the tragedy. While the Chicago Marathon won't take place until October, its leaders already were thinking about how Monday's events might change preparations for their race.

Kerry meets diplomat's family

SEC. OF STATE HAD MET WOMAN KILLED IN AFGHAN BOMBING

Chicago Tribune

The family of Anne Smedinghoff, the young diplomat killed this month in Afghanistan, met with U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry for about an hour Monday at O'Hare.

The family returned home to River Forest after the closed-door meeting and said they found Kerry's visit comforting.

John Kerry

"It really reinforces for us that Anne was part of a very close-knit family of very dedicated people who are serving our country in so many different ways," said Tom Smedinghoff, Anne's father, as he read from a piece of paper outside his home.

Anne Smedinghoff, 25, was killed along with four other Americans—three soldiers and an interpreter contracted with the government—in a bomb blast April 6 in the southern province of Zabul.

Kerry was returning from a 10-day trip to the Middle East, Europe and Asia. He descended from his Air Force plane at O'Hare and walked to a building off the tarmac to meet Smedinghoff's parents and three siblings.

dia were not permitted to enter the building. Kerry had met Smedinghoff in late March in Kabul, where she was one of the embassy staff helping to organize his visit.

Tom Smedinghoff carried a glass vase filled with white roses when he returned with his family to River Forest. The family came out of the home briefly to meet with reporters on the front lawn. Along their street, white ribbons hung on trees, and small American flags waved in the grass.

Kerry is one of a number of State Department employees who have reached out to the family, Tom Smedinghoff said.

During Monday's visit, Kerry expressed his condolences and talked about Smedinghoff's work as well as his personal memories of her during his trip to Kabul, her father said. In return, the family told Kerry more about Anne, her father said.

"Everybody understands and feels that kind of a loss," Kerry told employees earlier at the U.S. Embassy in Tokyo.

He said the Americans had been on their way to donate books to children.

Yemeni man describes Gitmo force-feeding

A Yemeni man, one of dozens of prisoners on hunger strike at Guantanamo Bay prison, gave a dramatic account of forced feedings and the conditions in the detention center in an op-ed published Monday in the New York Times.

Samir Najal al Hasan Moqbel, who said he has been held for 11 years and three months without charges, wrote that he has lost about 30 pounds since he began to refuse food Feb. 10 and would not eat "until they restore my dignity."

In March he was in the prison hospital and refused to eat. He described his first force-feeding:

"A team from the E.R.F. [Extreme Reaction Force], a squad of eight military police officers in riot gear, burst in. They tied my hands and feet to the bed. They forcibly inserted an IV into my hand. I spent 26 hours in this state, tied to the bed. During this time I was not permitted to go to the toilet. They inserted a catheter, which was painful, degrading and unnecessary. I was not even permitted to pray."

The detention camp at the Guantanamo Bay U.S. Naval Base in Cuba holds 166 men, most of them captured more than a decade ago in counter-terrorism operations. The prisoners are not allowed contact with the media.

The U.S. Navy said 43 prisoners have been on hunger strike, including 11 who were being force-fed nutrients. On Saturday guards swept through communal cells and moved prisoners into individual cells in an attempt to end the hunger strike.

Moqbel, 35, said one man weighed 77 pounds and another 98. He said his own last weight a month ago was 132 pounds.

Moqbel wrote that "no one seriously thinks I am a threat," adding that "years ago" the U.S. military said he was a guard for Osama bin Laden. "They don't even seem to believe it anymore. But they don't seem to care how long I sit here, either."

Asked about its decision to publish the article by Moqbel, New York Times spokeswoman Eileen Murphy said, "The value of today's piece by the Guantanamo detainee is obvious and it was an easy call to publish it."

"Guantanamo is run by the United States and these hunger strikes are happening. Readers have a right to know, in fact we would argue, they need to know about them," she said.

Moqbel told his story to his lawyers at Reprieve, a legal charity, through an Arabic interpreter, the Times said.

ABOUT GUANTANAMO

■ The camp has held 779 foreign captives, 166 of whom remain.

■ The U.S. spends more than $114 million a year to run the Guantanamo prison, according to the General Accountability Office. That is $686,747 per prisoner, or nearly 20 times as much as the U.S. Bureau of Prisons spends per inmate at its high-security prisons. Costs are high because of the U.S. economic embargo against Cuba, which forces the military to import food, fuel and supplies to the base from the United States.

■ Former President George W. Bush authorized military tribunals to try captives on charges of war crimes shortly before the camp opened. President Obama criticized the tribunals but has continued them under revised rules. Only seven cases have been completed in 11 years, two of which were overturned on appeal.

■ Obama ordered the camp closed by January 2010 but missed the deadline. Nearly half of the remaining prisoners are Yemenis, and Obama suspended transfers to that nation due to reports that an al-Qaida affiliate there was behind a failed attempt to blow up a U.S. airplane on Christmas Day 2009.

The Cubs plan to put a video scoreboard in right field. NUCCIO DINUZZO/TRIBUNE

The Wrigley revamp deal is done, but the work is far from over

Chicago Tribune

"We will win the World Series."

Yep, Cubs owner Tom Ricketts went there. He said it Monday at a news conference at Wrigley Field to outline the team's plans to renovate the 99-year-old ballpark.

He said the "financial impact" of the development plan "will help us do that."

The development plan, which includes rights-of-way and new electronic and other signage and still needs zoning and community development approval, will make the organization more "efficient" financially and "increase Theo's ability to put dollars on the field," Ricketts said, mentioning Cubs President Theo Epstein.

The Cubs would not have to pay the city of Chicago to use public sidewalks and streets to expand the Wrigley footprint.

The team released details of its proposal with the city, which allows the Cubs to upgrade Wrigley and add more night games and advertising in and around the ballpark.

The Ricketts family plans to spend $300 million in the stadium and another $200 million developing a hotel and office building on adjacent property. Mayor Emanuel, in a statement Sunday, stressed that the Cubs will restore Wrigley without taxpayer dollars.

The city will vacate sidewalk space and one street lane on Waveland Avenue and sidewalk space on Sheffield Avenue, which according to the Ricketts' proposal would be at no cost to the Cubs. The Cubs sought to expand the footprint of Wrigley as much as 10 feet outward to mitigate the effect of a giant video scoreboard in left field and see-through-sign in right field on rooftop clubs overlooking the stadium.

The team also plans to construct a pedestrian bridge over Clark Street without having to purchase air rights from the city.

THE WRIGLEYVILLE INVESTMENT

In approving the Cubs' Wrigley Field plan, the city agreed to support the Cubs' application to change its property tax status to reflect the private funding of the restoration of a designated landmark. In return, the team is offering to make investments in Wrigleyville. Among them:

- » Contribute $3.75 million between 2014 and 2023 to Wrigleyville infrastructure projects and investments.
- » Contribute $1 million to build a play lot on School Street.
- » Pay for 10 of the 30 additional public safety personnel that will be stationed outside Wrigley after games.

FUTURE CHAMPS?

Framework for restoration of Wrigley Field

The space for a new exterior wall on Waveland Avenue would come from the city vacating a parking lane on the street.

The Ricketts family would build offices and meeting space at the north end of the triangle property, along with a plaza with retail shops, a kids' zone and a video board.

The Cubs will work with the city on placement of a video board in left field and a sign in right field, similar in design to the current Toyota sign, in an effort to minimize impact on nearby rooftops. Sources say the video board could be up to 5,000 square feet, which would be twice as large as the center-field scoreboard. Sheffield Avenue would be closed for weekend home games between Memorial Day and Labor Day from two hours before the game until the end of the second inning.

The Ricketts plan calls for a 175-room hotel with 75 parking spaces, retail stores and a health club on recently purchased property across Clark street. A pedestrian bridge over Clark Street would connect the hotel and triangle property plaza.

The proposal includes a two-story Captain Morgan Club with a retail store and space for a visitors' clubhouse.

Other parts of the deal:

- » 40 night games, with systems in place to allow for additional night games when required by Major League Baseball's national television contract
- » Four concerts per year and six 3:05 p.m. starts for Friday games
- » 1,000 free remote parking spaces with shuttles to Wrigley Field
- » 30 additional safety personnel outside the park after games

The Bulls look like they're running out of steam as the regular season comes to a close. These five? Just getting warmed up.

1	The Bulls have one game left in the regular season. How are you feeling?	I've had some pain in my heel lately, probably unrelated to the Bulls.	Like D-Rose's ACL, we're ready, but God knows if we can handle the playoffs.	Woke up with a little snuffle but OK now. Thanks for asking.	I feel 100 percent. But not 100 percent. Good enough to play ... but not.	Really hungry, as usual. I wonder why that is ...
2	How will the Cubs greet A.J. Pierzynski when they play Texas on Tuesday?	With one of those buzzer handshake things. Cubs got jokes.	Remember how Nolan Ryan greeted Robin Ventura? That'll work.	Michael Barrett bobblehead night.	With a Michael Barrett memorial photo montage and hug fest.	Using hand signals. You're No. 1 too, A.J.!
3	With Kiyuji Fujikawa on the DL, how should the Cubs handle the closer's spot?	Lose earlier.	Extend the beer serving hours until the ninth inning ASAP.	Sign Kyra Sedgwick.	By putting the entire closer's role on the DL, too.	With oven mitts.
4	What should Loyola know about joining the Missouri Valley Conference?	First, Missouri has a valley, which previously was unknown to me.	The Misery Valley Conference was the original name.	The conference tourney was in St. Louis. Still want to go?	We do this crazy thing in the MVC ... it's called "attending sporting events."	Bring a notebook. It's tough to remember all the important details at a conference.
5	When Kobe Bryant returns from his knee injury ...	... Dwight Howard will have gotten three coaches fired.	... the Miami Heat will be wrapping up another championship. David Stern already told me.	... I'm guessing he'll have to recover from his Achilles injury?	... we can expect a limp in his travel.	... he should return the crutches to the hospital. It's not nice to steal.

Bringing the heat

Fans. Neighbors. Politicians. Business owners. Plenty of people had something to say about the agreement between the Cubs and city to renovate Wrigley Field. CHICAGO TRIBUNE

"We have a contract with the Chicago Cubs and we intend to see that it's enforced. [We] hope it doesn't get to [litigation]."

—Rooftop owner Beth Murphy, on whether businesses potentially affected by the Wrigley renovations could seek legal action

"There have been seven states that have entered the union since [the Cubs] last won a World Series [in 1908]. ... So maybe some change would be good."

—Scott Mulvanny, general manager of Yak-Zies bar (3710 N. Clark St.)

"The stadium is the whole reason I moved here. ... I think it will look out of place and take the old-time feel out, trying to modernize it."

—Erin Neary, 27, six-year Wrigleyville resident

"It's important to the region and the city of Chicago that we protect and maintain Wrigley Field for the next hundred years and that we protect the community in the meantime."

—U.S. Rep. Mike Quigley, a longtime Wrigleyville resident

"If in the long run it helps them win, then I'm willing to put up with it."

—Jim Schultz, seven-year Wrigleyville resident

"It's a win-win, both for Wrigley Field, so the Ricketts family and the ownership can do the investments they need to do. But it's also a win for Wrigleyville."

—Mayor Emanuel

Will we recognize Wrigley anymore?

Ryan Smith

It's the kind of story you might see on a "Real Housewives" reality show.

Rich Guy isn't satisfied with his wife anymore. She's aging naturally and the wrinkles are setting in. Sure, she's popular and most people love her just the way she is, warts and all, but Rich Guy sees other rich guys with young, smoking hot trophy wives. Thinking he can do better, Rich Guy tries to alter her looks with his money. Buys her Botox. Breast implants. A tummy tuck. But afterward, everyone realizes she's lost part of the quirky character that made her special.

It's the same thing I worry will inevitably happen with Rich Guy Tom Ricketts and the extreme makeover planned for his elderly bride—the Cubs.

The Cubs just announced a $500 million deal with the city that means a drastic face-lift for Wrigley Field and the surrounding area. The plan calls for a Jumbotron in left field. Also in the works: an outdoor plaza, a new parking garage and an office building and 175-room hotel across the street.

In other words, our once-charming neighborhood dive will mimic the kind of contrived, cookie-cutter ballpark you'll see just about anywhere else in America—a pricey, Cubs-themed amusement park. The Wrigleyville neighborhood, meanwhile, will continue evolving into a beer-soaked suburb within the city.

Why? The Cubs' billionaire bosses say they need more revenue, despite the fact that Forbes just called the Cubs the most profitable franchise in the league with $32 million in operating income last year.

So instead of gently preserving a historic landmark, they want to transform its character. Not because it's necessary but because, well, I'm not sure. Maybe Ricketts is just jealous of all the shiny new ballparks that have popped up over the past decade and wants the next best thing.

Our beloved Wrigley may never be the same, but I guess we should think about the bright side—now we'll get that Kiss Cam we've been dreaming of.

ALBUM REVIEW

The Flaming Lips
The Terror

By Kyle Kramer

FORREDEYE

In recent years, the Flaming Lips have worked hard to sacrifice their once-abundant goodwill by making their music synonymous with weird stunt releases and overwrought visual accompaniments.

In the sense that the band's latest album, "The Terror," doesn't arrive encased in a neon-painted ostrich egg or recorded as a transcription of a brain wave or delivered via submarine, it's a success. "The Terror" puts focus on the band's music and thoroughly explores its central theme.

It's unclear, however, where the appeal lies in an album that embodies creeping dread and lingering terror—particularly one that evokes those emotions with monotonous, textureless drone songs. If you're truly dedicated to sitting through a deadening, unchanging experience that takes single-note ideas and carries them on for way too long, you may want to try these experimental art installations I like to call "Having a Job" or "Winter in Chicago."

Assuming you opt to listen to "The Terror" instead, you will find lengthy spells of tedium like the 13-minute, three-note riff of "You Lust" or the grating "You Are Alone," which sounds like the part in every bad horror movie trailer where a little girl starts acting creepy. There are moments like the heavy bass riffs in the second half of "Butterfly, How Long it Takes to Die" and "Turning Violent" that promise to jar you out of complacency, but they are frustratingly brief.

It may be less obnoxious than the band's constant parade of provocative extra-musical ideas, but this album's single-minded devotion to unpleasantness is too on-the-mark to be enjoyable.

Hollywood comes to Chicago—and it's really hungry

ABOUT LAST NIGHT

Luis Gomez

lgomez@tribune.com
@aboutluisgomez

The stars of "Divergent" took a break from factional feuding in the post-apocalyptic sci-fi film currently shooting in Chicago to have dinner together Sunday at Girl and the Goat in the West Loop.

Shailene Woodley, whose character leaves the "faction" she was born into for another (in the story, society is divided into five different factions), was joined at the restaurant by co-stars Miles Teller, Zoe Kravitz, Theo James, Jai Courtney, Ben Lamb, Ben Lloyd Hughes, Christian Madsen (son of Chicago native Michael Madsen) and Chicago actress Amy Newbold. Kate Winslet, Mekhi Phifer and recent addition Ashley Judd also star in the movie but were not on hand for the cast dinner.

"Divergent" began filming April 8 at Cinespace Chicago Film Studios. Gov. Quinn claimed the movie, currently filming under the alias "Catbird," will create 1,000 jobs and contribute $30 million to the local economy. "Divergent" is based on the young adult nov-

AND THERE'S MORE

Also filming in Chicago last week was NBC's "Chicago Fire," which returned to shoot Friday at Lottie's Pub in Bucktown. The independent film "Open Tables," which stars Joel Murray and shot Thursday at The Goddess and Grocer, also filmed in Bucktown.

els by Chicago author Veronica Roth. "It still seems so unreal to me that any of this is happening," Roth wrote on her blog. "Every time I experience something that makes it feel more real, I go through this period of shock like I'm the kid in that David After Dentist video." ### ALSO SPOTTED ...

» The Bears' Matt Forte appeared at the Macy's on State Street on Thursday to kick off the Men's Style Event.

» The Blackhawks' Patrick Kane hung out Tuesday at Board Room. Teammate Dave Bolland dined April 5 at Roka Akor.

» Q-Tip DJed on Friday at the Hennessy Black-sponsored "Downtown 88" art show, which featured work by Chicago artist Hebru Brantley, at Lacuna Artist Loft Studios.

» Carla Gugino ("Spy Kids") dined at Paris Club April 1 and 6 while in town to film the ABC pilot "Doubt."

» Debi Mazar ("Entourage") and Little Big Town singer Kimberly Schlapman stayed at The Wit hotel Tuesday through Thursday. They were in town for the Scripps Networks up-front event at the Chicago Theatre.

» Singer Tristan Prettyman had dinner Friday at Nellcote.

» The Bulls' Jimmy Butler, White Sox executive vice president Kenny Williams and TNT basketball personality Mike Fratello were spotted, separately, Wednesday at Tavern on Rush.

Heads up

Woody's Wiffle Ball Classic—hosted by retired Cub Kerry Wood—is set for Aug. 10 and will feature a wiffle ball tournament and celebrity home run derby at Wrigley Field (with Wood pitching, no less). The fundraiser for the Wood Family Foundation replaces the annual Strike Zone Celebrity Bowling Tournament.

OK, Katniss fans, now you can start getting excited. The first teaser trailer for “The Hunger Games: Catching Fire” premiered Sunday during the MTV Movie Awards, and, well, it’s SOOOOOOOO good. Katniss (Jennifer Lawrence) and Peeta (Josh Hutcherson) have returned from the games victorious, but they might be in more danger than ever. Major props to whoever put this together—there’s plenty of action, but barely a spoiler to be found. The flick hits theaters Nov. 22.
